From Equestrian and Leisure Centres to Timber Frame accommodation and lakeside eateries, Metrotile is a great choice for any roofing for leisure project

Metrotile has been used for a variety of roofing for leisure projects, from beach chalets in Bournemouth to the refurbishment of the Unison Clubhouse at a holiday park in Croyde Bay. Our lightweight roofing has won numerous accreditations and certificates, and is rigorously tested to withstand harsh weather conditions, making it the ideal roofing for your project. Not only is Metrotile used for leisure buildings, it's also specified by Equestrian Building constructors, Scotts of Thrapston, for its lightweight properties and stunning aesthetics, and can be found at Ingliston Equestrian Centre in Bishopton, Scotland.

Lightweight roofing

Our roofing is up to 15% lighter than traditional roofing materials such as slate or clay. Being extra lightweight means it will pose no strain on the structure of lighter frameworks such as chalets, stables, or non-traditional buildings. Supporting timber frame structures will have reduced stress with a Metrotile, making it the unsurpassed roofing material of choice for the leisure and equestrian industries. Lighter tiles mean quick installation, as well as a safer construction site, so you can have your leisure buildings finished in no time.

Stunning aesthetics

At Metrotile, we understand that holiday resorts, equestrian centres and chalets are often placed in beautiful landscapes and surroundings. This is why we've ensured our roofing has numerous styles and colours available so you can match your building to compliment the surrounding nature, while in keeping with your overall aesthetic and brand. If you're looking to rejuvenate your existing look, take a look at our Croyde Bay Holiday Village case study, where we revamped the clubhouse and chalet accommodation for a stunning result.
